Creator History

Judith Dunn (née Goldsmith, 1933-1983) was an American dancer, choreographer, and founding member of the Judson Dance Theater in New York City. She obtained a master's degree in dance from Sarah Lawrence College. From 1958 to 1963, Dunn danced with the Merce Cunningham Dance Company, where she met and married musician, choreographer, and founder of the Judson Dance Theater, Robert Dunn. A leader and founding member of the company, Dunn collaborated with avant-garde filmmakers, composers, dancers, and artists. In 1966, after her divorce from Robert Dunn, she began working more extensively with musician Bill Dixon. The couple created the Judith Dunn/Bill Dixon Company, an experimental dance and music group.

Dunn taught dance at Brandeis University, Sarah Lawrence College, the Merce Cunningham Studio, the New Dance Group Studio, Columbia University Teachers College, and Bennington College. Judith Dunn passed away in her home in 1983.

Scope and Content Note

The Judith Dunn collection dates from 1963 to 1978 and documents Dunn's career as a performing artist and choreographer. The collection contains primarily film and video recordings. Files containing correspondence, notes, biographies, and programs are also present.

The recordings date from 1964 to 1974 and document dance classes, improv performances, student discussions, and other performances and film clips featuring Dunn, Dixon, and members of their company, including Jack Moore and Barbara Ensley.

The file for the Judith Dunn/Bill Dixon Company contains newspaper clippings, biographies of Dunn and Dixon, and lists of choreographic works. Notes include Dunn's personal writings as well as choreographic notes. Correspondence is primarily between Dunn and Dixon, with one note from Tom Borek accompanying issues of Eddy, a magazine edited by Borek that published articles on dance and other arts.
