Creator History

E.Y. "Yip" Harburg, academy award winning lyricist, was born in New York City on April 8, 1896. He received his nickname "Yipsel" (Yiddish for squirrel) during his youth on the Lower East Side. Harburg received his education in the the New York City public school system, eventually graduating from City College. While in college he collaborated with Ira Gershwin, a fellow student, on a light verse column in the school newspaper. It was during this time that Harburg was introduced to the works of Gilbert and Sullivan and was greatly influenced by the lyrical style of W.S. Gilbert.

After graduating from college he went into the electrical supply business. This went bankrupt in the stock market crash in 1929. It was the experience of being unemployed in the Depression which led to the beginning of his career as a lyricist, writing the lyrics for the song "Brother Can You Spare a Dime" with Jay Gorney for the review Americana. From there his career took off with shows such as Garrick Gaieties, Ziegfeld Follies, Life Begins at 8:40, and Hooray for What? Among his early film credits are The Singing Kid, Gold Diggers of 1937, Cabin in the Sky, Can't Help Singing, Centennial Summer, and the Academy Award winning, The Wizard of Oz.

His Hollywood career, came to an abrupt end, when he was blacklisted by the film industry after World War II. His outspoken political views and his affiliation with the Hollywood Democratic Committee made him a prime candidate for the McCarthyites of the post-war era resulting in his absence from the Hollywood film scene for 12 years and the revoking of his passport.

Banned by the Hollywood studios, Harburg returned to the New York theater where he continued writing lyrics for musicals including Finian's Rainbow, Flahooley, Jamaica, The Happiest Girl in the World, and Darling of the Day. Of these productions, Finian's Rainbow and Flahooley show marked political and social views. Harburg returned to Hollywood in 1962 with the film Gay Purr-ee, an animated feature film with Judy Garland as the voice of the main character. In 1968 his Broadway musical Finian's Rainbow was recreated on the screen with Fred Astaire and Petula Clark in starring roles.

Harburg's musical collaborators wer numerous. Among them were: Harold Arlen, Vernon Duke, Jay Gorney, Jerome Kern, Burton Lane, and Arthur Schwartz. He also wrote plays and among his playwright credits are Flahooley and Finian's Rainbow, co-authored by Fred Saidy; and What a Day For a Miracle co-authored by Henry Myers. He also wrote a book of light verse entitled Rhymes for the Irreverent.

Harburg wrote lyrics up until his death. He also lectured and made personal appearances throughout his career. He was a guest speaker in the successful Lyrics and Lyricists Series of the 92nd Street YMHA. He died on March 5, 1981 in Los Angeles, California days before he was scheduled to receive the Johnny Mercer Award of the Songwriter's Hall of Fame.

Scope and Content Note

The E.Y. Harburg Papers consist of correspondence, scripts, music and lyrics, personal papers, ephemera, articles, notes and clippings that document his career as a writer, producer, director, and lyricist. The papers are divided into six series, correspondence, scripts, synopses and treatments, music and lyrics, personal papers, and clippings.

The collection consists mainly of scripts of musical productions from E.Y. Harburg's career as a writer and lyricist. Most scripts are annotated and are in multiple drafts. Titles included are the play The Wizard of Oz, Flahooley, Finian's Rainbow, Bloomer Girl, and Life Begins at 8:40. There is only a small amount of materials from one of his most successful works The Wizard of Oz. Lyrics and music from The Wizard of Oz can be found in the Music and Lyrics series in the collection and some references are in the Correspondence series and Clippings series. Nevertheless, the collection provides an abundance of materials on other productions and various aspects on E.Y Harburg's career.
