Biographical Note

Victor Barnowsky (1876-1952) was an actor, theatrical director and producer, and university professor of drama. Barnowsky began his career as an actor in Germany around the turn of the century. For at least 25 years he was a producer-director in Berlin. He operated the Kleines Theater from 1905 to 1913, the Lessing Theater from 1913 to 1924, and the Komödienhaus from 1925 to 1930; he was particularly well-known for his work at the Lessing Theater. In 1931 C. Hooper Trask said in the New York Times that Barnowsky's repertory "formerly stood on the highest intellectual level of any in the world". More conservative than his contemporary Max Reinhardt (1873-1943), Barnowsky was not concerned with innovation but rather with the continued staging of both classic and modern works without sacrificing artistic integrity to box-office appeal. He was noted for his productions of Ibsen, Shaw, Strindberg, and Shakespeare. Several successful actors worked closely with Barnowsky, including Elizabeth Bergner (1900-?) who began her career in Barnowsky's production of As You Like It.

Barnowsky left Germany in 1933 after Hitler came to power. He endeavored to continue his career as a theatrical producer in Europe and then in the United States. He worked in Hollywood briefly as a writer. He settled in the Bronx with his wife Sophie Apsel Barnowsky and taught the history of theater and dramatics at Fordham University and Hunter College, starting around 1941 and continuing for the rest of his career.
Scope and Content

The collection consists of Correspondence (1934-1949), Dramatic Production Papers (1938 & nd), Writings - Non-fiction, Writings - Fiction (1920-1944), Biographical Papers (c.1930-1933), and Photographs. Correspondence contains drafts of a letter, 1949, to George Bernard Shaw in which Barnowsky discusses his work. Dramatic Production Papers include include a stage version of Ibsen's Ghosts, along with synopses and outlines of various works including Goethe's Egmont and Schiller's Don Carlos.

Writings - Non-fiction includes the lecture series "The European theater of Yesterday and the American Theater of Today" and "Priests, Nuns and the Theater" which Barnowsky used when he taught at Fordham University but apparently also hoped to have published. There are essays written in the form of reminiscences about his career in Germany. Writings - Fiction include several drafts and annotated copies of Barnowsky's play The Hand That Rocks the Cradle, an anti-war drama based on an idea by A.J.Righthouse, and bearing similarities to the Lysistrata of Aristophanes. Other writings include synopses of Barnowsky's ideas for screenplays and dramatic works, and a manuscript of a work of narrative fiction entitled the Nativity Idol. Biographical Papers are journalistic accounts and promotional pieces written in the early 1930's and concerned with Barnowsky's life and work.

The Photographs of Alexander Granach, an actor who worked with Barnowsky.
